The Honorable Joseph A. Doorley, Jr., Mayor

The Honorable The City Council

In compliance with Section 179 $\frac{1}{2}$ of Chapter 2 of the Revised Ordinances of the City of Providence there is submitted herewith the Annual Report of the Department of Public Welfare for the fiscal year ended September 30, 1968.

Foreword

There is growing dissatisfaction with the welfare system and many long-time supporters have joined the critics. Eight million Americans receive public assistance at a cost of about $8 billion, which is less than 1% of the gross national product. More than 2 million of the recipients, mostly women, are 65 or over, with an average age of 72. Another 700,000 are totally blind or disabled. Almost 4 million are children whose parents cannot support them, 1,100,000 are their mothers, and 160,000 are their fathers. 100,000 of the fathers are physically or mentally incapacitated and unable to work. These statistics from the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare point up the fact that the majority of those on welfare are too young, old, sick or disabled to be self-supporting, or are mothers with small children requiring care. The all too common view that welfare is for those temporarily down on their luck cannot be sustained.

Job training programs, however well motivated, bypass the vast majority of welfare recipients. The Congressionally appointed Advisory Council on Public Welfare estimated that there are only about 50,000 unemployed fathers who might be eligible for employment. The Council study found that only 20 to 30 percent of over 1 million mothers supported by welfare might have the abilities to go into employment after vocational training. This only if there were enough day care centers to care for their children, and presumably enough jobs. The fact is there are not enough qualified day-care facilities to meet demands of the current working-mother labor force. Certainly job-training programs cannot be discounted but, the point is that they can serve only a very small percent of the welfare poor and cannot provide a way to independence for as many as 6.5 million.

Proposals have been made to replace the present public assistance program. These do not appear to have broad acceptance and support. Yet, the present system is a conglomeration of programs, the product of periodic postscripts and biennial amendments. The promise of the Social Security Act of 1935 was a minimum standard of health and decency. It has never been fulfilled because there has never been a national welfare program. Though the Federal government foots over 60 percent of the cost the control is exercised by the states. Consequently there are many welfare programs in this country and the result is dismal confusion.

Each state establishes its own eligibility requirements and thus these vary from state to state. Arbitrary and picayune regulations abound. One can be eligible in one state and ineligible in another. The variations in relief grants are extreme and defy explanation since they do not reflect the fiscal abilities of individual states. Some states enforce residency requirements while others have none. States may decline to participate in federally supported programs for the poor. They may reject a part of a program. In only 21 states, as of June 1968, was federal aid available to families in need because a parent was unemployed. Too much control of the welfare program was given to the states and they have failed in their responsibilities to the poor. It is doubtful that any solution short of a nationalized public welfare system completely out of the hands of state governments can meet the needs of those in poverty living in a land of plenty.

We of the Department of Public Welfare are grateful for the interest and support received throughout the year.

Respectfully submitted,

Director of Public Welfare
