Report of the president

This annual meeting completes my services as President of the Board of Trustees of the Providence Public Library. I have enjoyed my responsibilities over the seventeen years and hope that my services have been of some significance. I wish to congratulate Mr. Green on his succession and hope that he also will enjoy this civic responsibility.

The plan of the nominating committee to adopt a program of automatic rotation in the Board and in the officer setup is, I feel, constructive, although on the other hand I do believe that continuity is vital.

I will not attempt to review the Library's history in the recent past. The annual reports are adequate for this, and, after all, the history of the Library is not to be written out in terms of individuals but rather in accomplishment and service to the community. In spite of the recent necessity of cutting back on service, I feel that the Library has served Providence and the State in an admirable fashion and I have no reason to doubt that it will continue to do so. It is unfortunate that so much of our time must be concerned with fiscal problems, but this does not seem to be confined solely to private charities.

I wish to commend Mr. Taylor for his management of the Library in the past two years and his willingness to face up to practical matters which require solutions. The staff continues to perform its functions competently and loyally, the work of Mrs. Miles at South Providence in the recent troubled past being an example which should not be overlooked.

I will close by expressing my appreciation of the help and guidance given me by the Corporation and Trustees, particularly the members of the Executive Committee, who have involved themselves in the day-to-day problems of the Library. I wish to record with regret the retirement from the Board of R. Henry Field, who no longer is living in the state. He had been a member since 1940.

Philip B. Simonds

PPL is people

Books, magazines, newspapers, films, pamphlets, records, information, ideas – that is a library. Enthusiastic, knowledgeable, friendly people making these materials easily available to other people – that is a good library. During the past nine months*, as in other years, the trustees, administration and staff of the Providence Public Library have directed their efforts toward finding the most effective means of serving the total community. A changing society and an ever-growing world of knowledge in a variety of forms require periodic reevaluation of methods and services. We have taken a new look at old ways, and the results have been changes in techniques and expansion into new areas, as well as a continuation of previously successful efforts. We kept in mind that PPL IS PEOPLE as . . .

We made physical changes

Our new Central Children's Department opened on the first floor on May 18. This lively, inviting room will put boys and girls in the center of library activity and is planned as an innovative, creative area where they can be encouraged to read for enjoyment and information. Now, with service to children extended into evening hours, families are discovering the joy of using the Library together.

A relocated and expanded Circulation Department also opened in May, combining in one attractive and convenient area all circulation and registration functions for more efficient service.

At the same time, the long-awaited "open stacks" policy went into effect. Readers now have easy direct access to many more books and are quickly learning the pleasure and convenience of browsing freely in the Library's collections. As a security measure, guard service is provided in the stacks and at the Empire Street entrance to the Library, and the Washington Street entrance has been closed.

The small, cramped Reader's Advisor's office has been opened into the Reference Department and a larger service desk brought out into the mainstream of activity. This encourages more readers to ask for assistance and allows librarians to work more easily with those in need of help.

* Because the Library changed its fiscal year to July 1-June 30, effective July, 1970, this report covers the nine month period from October, 1969-June, 1970.

(left) The children of Providence celebrated the opening of their new Children's Department with a party – and what's a party without balloons?

We provided information reflecting a changing world

The Book Selection Committee and the Children's Librarians examined the year's tremendous output of printed matter and selected 6,406 new titles for the collection.

Readers throughout the system borrowed 620,724 items and found answers to 104,767 reference and research questions.

A more flexible circulation policy for magazines now encourages maximum utilization of that important collection.

Over 500 films for use by groups and organizations were borrowed for PPL patrons from the Rhode Island Library Film Cooperative.

Among regular exhibits were two controversial and popular ones reflecting contemporary issues: "Striking Images," a visual documentation of campus protest, and "Counter-Education," a montage of themes upon which much of our modern thinking rests.

The newly organized Staff Social Action Committee sponsored a public forum with speakers representing all sides of the Vietnam/Cambodia issue and obtained giveaway literature produced by the Student Strike Committee and the Anti-Strike Coordinating Committee of Rhode Island.

Six showings of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration film – "Eagle Has Landed, The Flight of Apollo 11," obtained through the office of Senator John O. Pastore, gave adults and youngsters the first opportunity in our State to see this official documentary of man's landing on the moon.

Booklists on a variety of subjects were prepared and distributed widely, including two on the environmental problem: "Crisis" – books for children – and "Our Dying Environment" – books, articles and films for adults.

A paperback collection at the Central Library has proved as successful as those at the branches. Both children and adults have responded to the lure of these pocket-sized books chosen for their popular appeal.

As a response to concern expressed by both young people and adults on the problem of drug addiction, film and discussion programs were held at several branches and generated wide participation.

(above) A basic library responsibility is to awaken citizens to current concerns and to provide materials for information and understanding of these issues.

technology

We made use of modern technology

A new system of issuing materials which combines use of our data processing facilities with photographic charging equipment has simplified and speeded up basic daily clerical routines, giving the staff more time to serve the public.

The demand for materials in microform has increased rapidly. Readers requiring information from newspapers and magazines used 20,535 reels of microfilm.

Instant copying service fills many needs, as evidenced by the over 6,000 microprints and 70,000 photocopies produced by the staff-operated machines. The coin-operated copy machines at the Central Library and several branches are also extremely popular.

Functioning as the Principal Public Library in the State's Interrelated Library System, we filled, through our teletype communications center, 7,696 requests for information and materials from other libraries in Rhode Island.

Cassette tape recorders give children a chance to "do their thing" by taping their own voices. Branch patrons were pleased with the installation of stereo record players, and Central Library boys and girls welcomed the transfer of the circulating collection of children's records from Art and Music to their own department.

We offered programs for diverse needs

Almost 2,000 programs, both innovative and traditional, were held for children. Films, rock concerts, story hours, folk singing, puppetry, creative arts and dramatics, as well as record hops, talent shows and a playwriting and producing club, attracted 34,766 children to branches and the Central Library and reflect the staff's desire for experimentation and a sensitivity in their approach to this important facet of children's work.

Children's librarians made 1,234 visits to schools and community agencies, introducing the Library, telling stories and giving book talks.

Adults relived the golden age of comedy and introduced their children to the magic of W.C. Fields, Laurel and Hardy and other comedy greats at the Central Library's first public film festival. A second series gave the audience a chance to shudder at mystery and suspense classics.

A large audience attended weekly lectures on investing conducted by local stockbrokers and sponsored in cooperation with the New York Stock Exchange. Books and other investment data from our Business-Industry-Science Department were in great demand during and following the series.

Librarians from all over the state continued to attend monthly adult and juvenile book review meetings and Principal Public Library workshops such as "The Detached, The Disenchanted and The Disadvantaged," where they gained insight into the "unreached" segments of our society.

We tried to make more people aware of our services

Two weekly radio programs give listeners an opportunity to hear our staff discuss books and library-related topics. "Speaking of Books" is broadcast on WEAN Tuesday evenings from October through April. This year we added "The Bookmen Speak" (WPRO) to our schedule. This is an all-year-round weekly Sunday evening program on which we talk informally about books, services and current library trends.

A list of book suggestions contributed to each bi-weekly issue of Teleview 36, the printed program of WSBE TV, Rhode Island's Educational TV channel, provides viewers with suggestions for background reading related to the programs they see.

Monthly tours by new classes enrolled in the Work Incentive Program (WIN) of the Manpower Development Training Act introduced the Library to adults who, for the most part, had never before used our services.

No Overdue Wednesday, May 20, the first fine-forgiveness day in the history of the Library, not only brought back about 2,700 overdue books to the system, but also gave us considerable mass media coverage, helping to "spread the word" about PPL.

We met discouragement . . . and the people responded

On March 9, the South Providence Branch was severely damaged by fire. The community's response proved at once what we already knew, that this senseless vandalism was in no way a repudiation of the Library, nor did it have racial overtones. Within a day, the Mothers of the South Side Boys' Club had set up a meeting of concerned citizens ready to help.

Service was reinstated through use of a bookmobile generously loaned by the Rhode Island Department of State Library Services. Restoration of the branch began at the end of April and was completed for reopening on July 8. Our cover photo shows a young South Providence volunteer facing the huge clean up job.

This unfortunate experience gave the PPL administration and staff and the community an opportunity to work together. It showed us that people do care about the Library and are ready to respond to its needs. It was not just a library that the people of South Providence were working to restore; it was their library.

We planned for the year ahead

The year ahead has some discouraging aspects. Once again our anticipated expenses will go significantly beyond our projected income. It is inevitable that there will have to be retrenchment in services and book buying. Some of these decisions have already been implemented. All cutbacks, however, have and will come only after serious study and consideration of how, despite financial difficulties, we can best meet the needs of the people whom we serve – for, in the last analysis, PPL WILL ALWAYS BE PEOPLE.

Respectfully submitted,

F. Charles Taylor, Librarian
