Principal, Co-Owner

As a Principal and co-owner of KITE Architects, Christine's career as an architect has spanned a variety of project types from large complexes to small renovations with a priority on effective management and technical excellence.

KITE's focus on design that benefits the community is a source of pride, and a shared value that drives the firm today. Her appreciation for KITE's design sensibility and technical rigor brought her to Providence in 2003 to join the firm that she now has co-owned since 2008 along with Albert Garcia.

Previously she completed post-professional graduate work at Harvard that focused on management and development issues related to green building after working as an architect for nearly a decade in the Washington, DC region.

Christine is heavily involved in a number community and professional organizations. She has been Chair of the Providence City Plan Commission since 2012 and is the Architect member of the Providence Building Board of Review. She is also a current officer of the Providence Revolving Fund, and a past trustee of the Providence Preservation Society. Nationally she annually serves as a Chair for visiting teams for the accreditation of professional schools of architecture in the United States and abroad, and has completed reviews for institutions including Columbia University, the Art Institute of Chicago, and Kuwait University.
